The Explosions in London.

WHITTIER speaks of a shot that was heard round the world. So it may be said of the explosions in London yesterday that they were heard round the world. We write without knowing all that will yet come to light on the subject, but if the crime was such a one as we suppose it was it will cause a revolution of some sort in England. The firing upon Fort Sumter in 1861 converted friendly northern people into brutes howling for the blood of their own kind. The dynamiters of London from Cairo to Khartoum is somehave set the people of England crazy, thing like 1,500 as the Nile flows. and have done the human race a great | For the first 500 miles above Cairo the wrong. The effects of FAWKES'S distance from Metemneh to Khartoum is crime were felt by CHARLES I., about ninety-five miles as the Nile flows, CHARLES II., JAMES II., and are felt in England to-day. That crime made possible the accession of WILLIAM and MARY, of Queen ANNE, of temneh, along the Nile, is about four GEORGE I. That crime, in a word, banished the STUARTS from England, though it is seldom or never thought of dred and sixty miles. As we underin that connection.

Like causes produce like results. The consequences of yesterday's crime in London (if it was such a crime as we suppose at this writing it was) will be the western terminus of the route far-reaching both in time and otherwise.

" A pebble in the streamlet scant has changed the course of many a river." So small events change the policy of kings and the destiny of empires. To kill a thousand men in battle is one thing. To kill a dozen men or one man by cruel, wicked, cold-blooded assassination is another thing. It is not the number of lives lost that determines the heinousness of the offence, but the circumstances under which they are

Indian Paupers.

Last Wednesday, in the United States House of Representatives, whilst the Indian appropriation bill was under consideration, Mr. REAGAN, of Texas, made the following centre-shot:

from were both made in the face of ob-Mr. Chairman, I simply rise to say that it would be very interesting to me, and I have no doubt to the American people generally, if somebody would find out a way by which the Indians, like other people, could be made to work for their living. We have millions of poor people in the United States, many of them quite as poor as these Indians, no sign that he fears any disaster. On the contrary, the meagre dispatches but we do not appropriate money to support them in idleness, to feed and clothe them off the labor of other peoindicate that he knows exactly what ple; and it has always been a curious fact to me that we have gone on year after year appropriating large sums of money to feed an idle, lazy, vagabond set of Indians, and have never been able to a successful issue at a date not very far from the time he specified. The disto find any way to put them to work for their living. [Applause.]

It is one of the most singular lines of policy that ever any Government pursued, that which our Government has pursued towards the Indians. For a hundred years we have been "playing" with them as children play at "going to school," and other such amusements. We make treaties with the Indians, thus "playing" that they are not in this country. We "play" that it is their land and not ours which they inhabit. We "play" that though born in this country they are not citizens. We "play" that though on lands we have either given or sold them, and over which the Government claims neut domain, they are not subject to the jurisdiction of the United States. It is a wonderful survival. It reminds us of the keeper of the crypt under the Capitol at Washington whose name BEN. BUTLER discovered had been put regularly into an appropriation bill every year for scores and scores of years after his duties had ceased.

The Courier-Journal says: "Draw, for example, a line half-way between actual prohibition and abso-lute free trade. On either hand, to a certain point, an increasing revenue may be expected; though the whole course of our experience since the war has been on the side of increased revenue as the result of higher duties, and sice

If Mr. WATTERSON will study that osition, which we give in his own words, he will see that it is in effect the same proposition which we have so often advanced-namely, that to reduce the tariff might be to increase the revenues of the Government, and, conversely, that to raise the tariff might be to ce the revenues of the Government. It follows that to abolish all internal taxes might result in lowering the tariff as a means of increasing the revenues derived therefrom.

to raise the customs duties is to increase the revenue of the Government is but with three or four exceptions, is earnest. id not a few times that to affirm that raying in other words that a revet riff and a high tariff are one and the same thing. This conclusion cannot be escaped if the premises be conceded. The United States Government did not derive half as much revenue from whiskey when the tax was two dollars a gallon as it derives now when the tax upon that article is not half so high. Why? Simply because the tax was too high. It was not a revenue tax at all. The honest distillers had to quit making whiskey and the dishonest ones refused to pay the high tax, or any tax at all, upon the whiskey they made. The Government's receipts from the tax on whiskey in 1865, at two dollars a gal-

The Blair Bill.

Prior to 1861 we would have been unalterably opposed to the Blair bill. Since 1865 we have been loyally in favor of "the old flag and an appropriathe temper of his troops and the tem- tion."

It seems utterly inconsistent and unreasonable that there should be two constructions of the economic aspects of the Federal Constitution for the two great sections of the Union-the North and the South-and yet such has been sized army, speaking relatively, which could hold its own until reinforcements ment almost from its foundation. The North has been made rich by appropriations from the Federal Treasury; the South has remained poor because it would not receive back a share of the taxes paid by itself into the general treasury in the form of appropriations for public improvements. That the southern and Democratic construction of the organic law was the true one we ardently believe, but having failed in a mighty effort to maintain and enforce that construction, there is nothing left us but to accept the logic of events and to make the most of it .- Piedmont

Abbe were fully published in the Tampa papers. Mr. Crum says there is no such physician in Tampa as Dr. Hayden, the alleged founder of the Society. He further states that, in his opinion, the story was started by land-speculators and real estate agents on the St. John river to deter travellers and land-buyers from going to Tampa and other places in South Florida.
